

ABSTRACT

A timing apparatus is comprised of a magnet attached to the second hand of a clock and a reed switch. As the magnet passes by the reed switch, the reed switch closes and completes the circuit. The timing apparatus is used to control a pilotless ignition system that ignites waste gases in flare stacks from electrical discharges. The timing apparatus is also used to control a pipeline injection system.